

A MESSAGE FROM

M. Brian Blake

Provost and Executive Vice President for Academic Affairs

Dear Graduate Students,

The health and safety of our community has been our foremost priority during fall planning. As you know, given the resurgence of COVID-19 cases in the country as well as the growing unease among our faculty regarding in-person instruction, most graduate programs will be conducted online for the fall, with certain programs offering discipline-specific courses and training experiences in-person. We understand that the pandemic has affected all our populations in various ways. Our graduate students represent a group that resides off-campus and might already conduct coursework remotely. Consequently, normal planned tuition increases will not be applied to our graduate students for the 2020-21 academic year. The academic deans of school or colleges will communicate directly with their graduate students to provide details about how this decision impacts specific programs.

Thank you for your continued understanding as we navigate this unprecedented situation. Please stay safe and stay healthy.

Sincerely,

M. Brian Blake
Provost and Executive Vice President for Academic Affairs

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY

WASHINGTON, DC